

Electronic art

Hamish Graham

In 2005 HAMMISH GRAHAM suffered a high level spinal injury playing of all things, backyard cricket with his son (who knew it was such a dangerous sport!). Unfortunately this left him a quadriplegic, with chronic pain and unable to use his hands for anything other than flopping about a bit.

After around 7 years of coming to terms with his injury he was introduced to art again, this time the medium was his computer. Using a 'mouth mouse', which is a tube you move with your mouth and either blow or suck for right or left click. After some time hew was mucking around to produce images he liked in a completely new style, and to his surprise (and delight) others seemed to like them too.

This new found conduit to express himself seemed to open up the world again. Instead of feeling a burden to the world and to those around him, he was able to make a contribution again. This renewed sense of self-worth has truly turned his life around. He loves creating images so much he spends any time he can doing just that.

Artifact #1-2

Frog-Green-Yellow

Pheonix #2